

Idaho Incentives for Advanced Energy

Idaho is uniquely positioned to become the “carbon-free energy capital of the world.” The region has the distinction of being one of the few places in the world where you can find biomass, solar, wind, hydro, and nuclear energy.

IDAHO'S ENERGY LANDSCAPE

- Idaho is home to a variety of energy industries, from nuclear, hydro, wind, solar, biomass, geothermal and integrated energy systems.
- Idaho is a great place to locate your energy-related manufacturing businesses. Idaho Falls itself has a nuclear engineer location quotient of 92.37, the highest in the nation.
- Serving Southern Idaho and Eastern Oregon, Idaho Power services over 620,000 from 17 hydroelectric power plants and is one of the nation's few investor-owned utilities.
- As one of 17 national labs in the U.S. Department of Energy complex, Idaho National Laboratory is home to more than 6000 researchers and support staff focused on innovations in nuclear research, renewable energy systems and security solutions that are changing the world. For nearly 75 years, the INL has been in the Idaho Falls area. Idaho Falls was also the first city in Idaho with its own electric power plant.
- Did you know that on December 20, 1951, the first production of usable nuclear energy occurred at Idaho National Laboratory when four light bulbs were lit?
